Today’s Goals…

1. Review “popular” and “scholarly/peer-reviewed” sources.
2. Explore web resources on career searching
3. Look at a couple databases and import citations
4. Go over how to cite Primary Sources(APA)

The New York Times

Scholarly

- Examples include journals like Nature or The Journal of Sociology.
- Written by subject experts
- Written for other experts in the discipline and also students.
- Peer-Reviewed Articles are evaluated by other experts before they are considered for publication.

Popular

- Examples include: newspapers and magazines like Washington Post or The Economist.
- Written by journalists. Journalists are good writers and researchers, but they are not necessarily experts in the topic they are writing about.
- Written for a broad audience.
- Editors determine what is published

Search tip

By default, we will look for documents with

Primary versus Secondary sources:

(See handout)

Primary information does not come from previously published sources, so the American Psychological Association, or APA, does not require it to be documented in the works cited list. However, it needs to appear in an in-text citation. (Taken from this site)
